

TRAINS CRASH AND FORTY-ONE LIVES ARE LOST

and ten of the dead were taken to Elmira on a special train. All the other dead were taken to undertaking rooms in Corning and the other injured were conveyed to the Corning City Hospital. All the physicians in the city were summoned to attend them, while ministers and priests were called to administer last sacraments and receive messages from the dying.

Most of the bodies found were badly mangled.

The wrecked cars were one heaped-up mass of wreckage, jamming into each other in telescopic fashion. The last two cars on train No. 11 remained on the track and later were used as temporary hospitals.

At the Corning Hospital, which has accommodations for only forty patients, some of the injured had to lie upon the floors until physicians could give them attention. Those who visited the scene of the wreck before the hospital forces had time to finish the work of removal witnessed many scenes of horror. One man picked up a small white sheet which lay upon the ground, drew back and when he saw the face of the man who had been killed, he fainted.

The Rev. John T. Cassidy, a Catholic priest, was one of the early arrivals. He ministered to the injured and performed the last rites for those about to die.

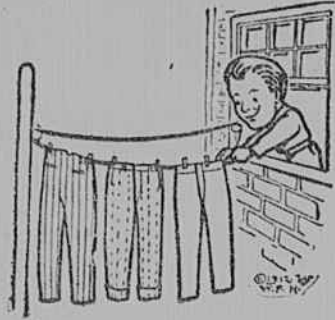

Homes Opened to Injured.
The people of Corning have opened their homes to the injured who could not get accommodations at the hospital or whose injuries were so slight that they could be treated at home.

This afternoon the workmen at the scene of the wreck picked up a human skull, which was entirely devoid of marks which would indicate whether it came from man or woman.

Although Engineer Schroeder, of the express, declared there was no danger to warn him of the presence of the stalled train ahead, Lackawanna officials declare to-night that a flagman had been sent back in the rear of No. 9 when she was held up.

Of the dead only twenty had been identified to-night. Among the dead was Dr. E. E. Ivey, an internist of Bellevue Hospital, home, Suffolk, Va.

ANDREW'S GRIP ON PLACE HARD TO SHAKE LOOSE

was, with unusual difficulty, forced to resign, it causes no wonder that he should, without warrant, call as witnesses a group of important men of the department, who nearly all immediately contradicted him, and whose immediate assurances to me by telegraph and telephone are among the pleasantest happenings of my official life. No one in the department who has done successful work would, I believe, endorse any of Mr. Andrew's statements.

"It was a great disappointment to me that Mr. Andrew was not efficient enough to meet the requirements, and that it was necessary to get some one else. That is all there was to it when the change was decided upon. Subsequently, in direct disobedience to my instructions, written and then repeated in two interviews sought by him, and without my knowledge until he had left Washington, he went to the Chicago convention, when the other two assistant secretaries had already gone by previous arrangement.

"This irresponsible conduct must have led in any event to his prompt separation from the department. Mr. Andrew, I see, has made the statement that he had told me he wished to go to Chicago to further monetary legislation. This is clearly an afterthought. He made no mention whatever of the monetary question. He gave only one reason for wishing to go. He said he intended to go into politics, and the convention afforded splendid opportunity to make political acquaintances."

ANNUAL CELEBRATION HELD AT UNIVERSITY

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

Charlottesville, Va., July 4.—The Fourth of July celebration at the University of Virginia Summer School proved the big event of the session, and compared favorably with the elaborate pageants of the past two years. The pageant plan as carried out proved one of the most striking ever executed by a State organization. It was comprehensive and thoroughly representative of all educational interests of the State and the history of the growth of Virginia education.

The day opened officially with a promenade of States, which included the twenty-five State groups represented in the summer school. More than 1,200 persons took part—students and teachers of the school. The District of Columbia was also represented, besides some fifty counties of Virginia. Each group presented some spectacle suggestive of its own State, and received its identity throughout the day.

The procession, headed by a portion of the Stonewall Brigade Band, of Staunton, moved at 11 o'clock. The line of route was along east lawn and up the middle of the campus to the rotunda, and thence along west lawn to Cabell Hall. The line of march was as follows: New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, South Carolina, Georgia, North Carolina, District of Columbia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Texas, West Virginia, Virginia, and delegations from the following State institutions: University of Virginia, University of North Carolina, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, William and Mary College, Richmond Woman's College, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Hollins Institute, Blackstone Female Institute, Washington and Lee and various public schools.

The New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and New York delegations made a big hit, with a large band, labeled "The Half Moon." Dutch costumes prevailed. The Maryland teachers, forty strong, won applause all along the line. At the head marched Lord Baltimore, carrying the Maryland flag, and Miss Davidson, of Baltimore. The teachers were attired in white, and carried helmets of orange and black. South Carolina came next, the teachers wearing white suits with blue sashes and big straw hats covered with Spanish gray moss. Thirty-eight were in line, led by Professor W. H. Hand, of the University of South Carolina. The Georgia teachers carried the State flag and baskets of peaches. The North Carolina girls wore huge blue hats. The Kentucky teachers carried a supply of hemp, tobacco and blue grass. Old Hickory was conspicuous in the line. The delegation, the teachers wearing blue and white sashes. There were four teachers from Arkansas, the land of the big apple. The University of Virginia students made the welkin ring with "Woodrow Wilson! Woodrow Wilson! Virginia! Virginia!"

The delegations entered Cabell Hall at 1:15 o'clock, banners were erected and the teachers were seated by States. The roll of States was called by Director Maphis. Each State responded to its name by some stunt, while some answered with a song or toast. The Maryland teachers first sang "Maryland, My Maryland," and then came an original song, "Our Maryland," composed by Miss Zimmerman, of Baltimore. The Goucher College yell was given after which Lady Baltimore distributed an array of orange daisies. The forty teachers, who pelleted the Virginia delegation amid much applause.

In the absence of Senator Gore, who wired that he could not fill his engagement because of the fact that his voice was in such bad condition as to render it impossible for him to deliver the address with justice either to himself or to the audience, President Alderman presided. The exercises concluded with the singing of "Dixie" and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

In the afternoon the State groups assembled on the university grounds, and enjoyed picnic, each group after its own fashion. In the evening the usual ball was given in the Fayerweather gymnasium.

GRATEFUL TO BYRD FOR BEATING MACHINE

Against Opposition of "Big Four" in Virginia
Politics He Swung Delegation to Wilson.

Baltimore, Md., July 4.—"Virginia's machine made a big blunder in opposing Wilson, and now it must take the consequences," said a delegate from the Old Dominion, just before leaving Baltimore. "It was a blow to the machine, one which can be appreciated by no one not intimately acquainted with Virginia politics."

Richard Evelyn Byrd, leader of the Wilson forces in Virginia, came to Baltimore with the majority of the twenty-four delegates against him, but when he left, having swung into line the entire delegation behind the illustrious son of the Valley of Virginia, he was quietly triumphant, for it is a big thing in Virginia for a man to set himself against the organization and win.

It really is a matter of amazement to me, he said, "that the only native of Virginia for decades who has had a chance to be nominated for President of the United States should have been opposed by Virginia delegates."

Expressed rank's sentiment.
In saying this, which was his only criticism, Mr. Byrd expressed the sentiment of the rank and file of Virginia politicians against the political order of things in the Old Dominion. He himself has been one of the rulers in the organization, but broke with the machine after the Virginia Senate turned down a number of progressive measures, which he had successfully engineered through the lower house.

organization, but another half vote, making the total 10.

Then it was seen that both Clark and Underwood were losing ground, and a caucus was called for Tuesday morning. Mr. Byrd by this time made no effort to oppose the adoption of the unit rule, and when the final reckoning came it was seen that he had won his fight and had the balance of power. The whole twenty-four votes were swung behind Wilson.

Where the Machine Was Benten.
Outsiders did not know the secret of the situation when Senator Swanson, on the forty-third ballot Tuesday afternoon, the same ballot that saw the switch of Illinois to Wilson, announced that Virginia cast its entire vote for the New Jersey Governor. But the conservatives in the Virginia contingent knew, and they rubbed their eyes and "sat up and took notice," for the machine had been worsted, the protestants had won a battle, the beginning of which had been in the past years.

This knowledge and the knowledge that Virginia had got solidly behind Wilson before the jangle came sweetened the tidings of his victory to thousands of progressive Democrats throughout the State.

And these look for the budding of a new regime in Virginia politics after the general election, for even the organization leaders admit Wilson will receive a sweeping majority in the Old Dominion, which will break all records and this will be wrought not by the machine, but by the voters themselves.

The proudest spot in that proud Old State to-day is Staunton, Wilson's birthplace. The little city, nestled in the green fields of Augusta county, is one of the State's finest agricultural sections, has less than 15,000 inhabitants, but every one there feels that it was a kind of personal victory.

And they are grateful to "Dick" Byrd, whose home is at Winchester, just down the Valley a piece—so grateful that they will try to induce him to stay in politics, whatever his personal inclinations.

Leg Broken by Motorcycle.
While practicing for the motorcycle races at the State Fair Grounds yesterday afternoon, Charles E. Blandford lost control of his machine, which collided with the fence, breaking his right leg. He was removed to Grace Hospital, where he was doing well last night.

Blandford, who lives at 204 South Third Street, is a salesman for Warner Moore & Co. He was about to enter one of the events when the accident occurred.
